When we meet someone for the first time, often judge by their appearance. The first information we get from someone is by sight, since in our society the image of people gives us much information about them. For example, a girl with a headscarf is Muslim, a boy dressed in black and your eyes makeup is Gothic. The problem is when the information we receive from the image of people becomes a damage and sometimes it becomes racism or xenophobia. Example of this is the town of El Ejido, where many Muslim immigrants come to work in agriculture, but due to the situation in the country are increasing street crime, and so people think all Muslims are equal in my opinion, is a political and social problem that has nothing to do with race or religion.

Also, our physical appearance affects our lives, many people with excellent studies are out of work for being ugly or overweight, are often not given the opportunity to demonstrate their knowledge.

Finally, I believe that one should not judge a person before one gets to know him well. I personally try to do it that way.
